ACCUTE 2026 CONFERENCE PROGRAM

About ACCUTE

Founded in 1957, the Association of Canadian College and University Teachers of English (ACCUTE) was incorporated under the Canada Not-for-profit Corporations Act in 2015. ACCUTE's purpose, as ratified in 2015, is to promote the interests of those teaching and researching in the various fields of English Studies in Canadian colleges and universities by facilitating the dissemination and exchange of research and the exploration of professional issues, by organizing scholarly and professional meetings, by seeking to improve working conditions, by representing and promoting the scholarly and research interests of members before such bodies as provincial and federal granting agencies, and by supporting the interests and aspirations of members entering the profession.

Territorial Acknowledgement

We would like to begin by acknowledging that Concordia University is located on unceded Indigenous lands. The Kanien'kehá:ka Nation is recognized as the custodians of the lands and waters on which we gather today. Tiohtià:ke/Montréal is historically known as a gathering place for many First Nations. Today, it is home to a diverse population of Indigenous and other peoples. We respect the continued connections with the past, present and future in our ongoing relationships with Indigenous and other peoples within the Montreal community.

Nous aimerions commencer par reconnaître que l'Université Concordia est située en territoire autochtone, lequel n'a jamais été cédé. Je reconnais/Nous reconnaissons la nation Kanien'kehá:ka comme gardienne des terres et des eaux sur lesquelles nous nous réunissons aujourd'hui. Tiohtià:ke / Montréal est historiquement connu comme un lieu de rassemblement pour de nombreuses Premières Nations, et aujourd'hui, une population autochtone diversifiée, ainsi que d'autres peuples, y résident. C'est dans le respect des liens avec le passé, le présent et l'avenir que nous reconnaissons les relations continues entre les Peuples Autochtones et autres personnes de la communauté montréalaise.

Code of Conduct

ACCUTE supports the Code of Conduct outlined by the Federation for the Humanities and Social Sciences. We are committed to the advancement of teaching, research, and scholarship through respectful, inclusive, and collegial discourse and engagement. Accordingly, we require adherence to these values by all participants in our events and meetings. We strive to ensure that the participants in our activities enjoy an environment free from discrimination, harassment and bullying. Further, we are committed to providing an atmosphere through all of our activities that encourages free expression and the exchange of ideas — in a respectful manner — as well as open, critically engaged and sometimes challenging discourse. To that end, we require that all participants comply with the Code of Conduct. Failure to do so may result in disciplinary action up to and including expulsion from Federation or association membership and/or participation in Federation or association activities.

1:30 p.m.      *WORKSHOP: Improvisatory Practices in Research and Pedagogy
MB 3.430

Organizer: Sharon Engbrecht, U of Guelph

"When broken down improvisation, etymologically, lends itself to the idea of unproviding for the future, a decolonial approach to colonialist histories of individualization and knowledge production, what Elwood Jimmy and Vanessa Andreotti describe as "thread sensibilities" in Towards Braiding. Threading sensibilities are an orientation towards relationships that focus on collective well-being critical of the hierarchical nature of goal- and progress-oriented outcomes and decision-making. With this in mind, what does it mean to improvise research? What can we do to incorporate improvisation into our scholarship? How can we incorporate improvisatory practices as educators?

Part introduction to the language and tools offered through Critical Studies in Improvisation, part open discussion, and part collaborative and create think-tank about arts-based practices and creative output, the "Improvisatory Practices in Research and Pedagogy" workshop will call attention to implicit hierarchies and institutional practices while also asking participants to respectfully consider and also call into question their own practices as scholars and educators.

This workshop will give participants the chance to answer some of the above questions and to think about the confluence of improvisatory practices in research and pedagogy. Critical Studies in Improvisation gives us language and tools to work within and responsibly challenge the colonialist creep, and neoliberal structure, of the university. The language and tools of improvisation can help us reevaluate the models we have inherited, asking us to think outside the box about how to shift entrenched institutional practices while mindful of the stakes in what it means when we expose a problem at the same time we might be perceived as posing a problem (Ahmed, Living a Feminist Life).

The workshop will ask participants to examine how improvisation brings into perspective different approaches to ways of being and doing. The design of the workshop will invite participants to co-design the contents and focus of discussion. This addresses questions about how co-creation takes place within structures that demand or, in the least often presume, a clear structure of knowledge production and quantifiable outcomes. The intention behind this opening-up of the workshop's potential boundaries also invites participants to think about the way modelling can be a basis for thinking through and embodying improvisatory practices.

Together we will investigate multiple contexts of knowledge production and improvisatory practices, including what that means for post-secondary teaching and learning, community-engaged research, and spaces of knowledge curation. The hope is to work together to build a collaborative and caring environment where we can experiment, take risks, and learn from one another, while acknowledging the diversity of our lived experiences and approaches as scholars and educators.

Chair and moderator, Nicola Nixon, Concordia U

Marcie Frank is Professor of English at Concordia University. She has published books on gender, theatre, and the development of literary criticism in 17th-century England, Gore Vidal’s career as a public intellectual, and most recently, The Novel Stage: Narrative Form from the Restoration to Jane Austen (Bucknell UP, 2020). Recent essays include “Point of View and Embodiment Revisited” in Eighteenth-century Fiction and “Situation: A Narrative Concept” in Critical Inquiry (Summer 2024), which she co-authored with Kevin Pask and Ned Schantz. The former is part of her current project about narrative point of view in the eighteenth-century novel and the novel of today; the latter emanates from SSHRC-funded team research into the narrative concept of situation.

10:30 a.m. ROUNDTABLE: Doing Critical Thinking Differently
MB 2.430

Moderator: Erin Moure, Writer and Independent Scholar

Three active poet-critic-teachers engage us in a conversation about doing critical thinking differently, from the perspective of their recent hybrid creative/critical works. After brief individual readings, panelists will contribute to a moderated conversation to shed light on their practices and approaches—which may break the norms of literary criticism, but also renew it and make it possible. In different and delightful ways, all three writers explore literary texts and precedents not by assuming a “critical distance” in order to speak about prior texts, but by writing in collaboration with these texts. The result is an opening of texts to contemporary critical response that does not deny the critic's own position as reader/writer, and that invites us all to read anew. With panelists Geneviève Robichaud (The Poetics of Translation), Joel Katelnikoff (Recombinant Theory), and Klara du Plessis (I'mpossible Collab).

10:30 a.m. *Doing Magic in the University: A workshop for the admin-curious
MB 3.430

Organizer: Lily Cho, York U

Co-organisers: Laura Moss, U of British Columbia; Neta Gordon, Brock U

English literature professors are over-represented, in the best way, in the ranks of senior administration across Canada. In this workshop, we examine the skills that scholars of English literature bring to administrative and leadership work in the university. Participants will learn to map the skills they already have as scholars in our field onto some of the skills necessary for being an effective administrator. As former administrators who have served in roles at multiple levels of leadership in Canadian universities, we know that administrative work, despite its many challenges, can be a place for doing magic in the university. We want to share that possibility for magic, and for transformation during these times of crisis and austerity. We will guide participants to understand how their gifts as scholars can set them up to be outstanding university leaders. While we would be delighted to be joined by folks who are currently administrators, we particularly welcome graduate students who may be considering careers in the university outside of TT positions, and colleagues who are newer to administrative roles (or who have not yet served in one).

Skills participants will acquire skills in:

- Understanding principles of university governance
- Using a literary review and similar research skills to understand the needs of leadership roles
- Recognizing the value of strategic editing in policy revisions
- Understanding the role of storytelling for better communications plans

- Connecting literary critical skills to understanding institutional budget processes
- Locating institutional data and using institutional data for advocacy and decision-making
- Connecting our skills in empathy and intersectionality to approaching leadership roles

Workshop Leaders:

Lily Cho is an Associate Professor of English at York. She has served as Undergraduate Program Director, Department Chair, Associate Dean at York University. She also served as Vice-Provost and Associate Vice-President, International, at Western University.

Neta Gordon is a Professor in the Department of English Language and Literature at Brock University. She served as Department Chair from 2008 to 2014 and Associate Dean for the Faculty of Humanities from 2018 to 2021.

Laura Moss is Professor of Literature at the University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Among other leadership roles, she has served as Canadian Studies Program Chair and as Associate Dean, Students for the Faculty of Arts. Currently on UBC Senate, she is chair of the UBC Teaching and Learning Committee.

3:30 p.m.      *WORKSHOP: Identifying and Disrupting Racialized-Gendered Normativities
in the Classroom Workshop
MB 3.430

Organizer: Alia Wazzan, Brock U

This workshop helps teachers not rooted in postcolonial feminist theory identify and disrupt normalized racialized and gendered assumptions about the “Other” that sneak into classroom discussions in many humanities and social sciences classrooms. The workshop draws on real statements the workshop leader has heard in feminist classrooms and offers practice and nuanced insights on how to disrupt statements embedded in hierarchical and binary logics shaped by normalized common sense and internalized racism. Grounded in postcolonial feminist theory (Mohanty; Mahmood; Abu-Lughod; Spivak; Riley; Schick; Loomba; Fanon; Cole), the workshop translates key insights from this body of theory into a simplified pedagogy that can be applied to educational settings in order to decolonize discourses that define the “Other.”

When asked why they join a feminist class, many (female) students from the Global South identify as oppressed by their culture, family, or religion and express hopes that a feminist course in Canada will liberate them from cultures they perceive as inherently misogynistic. Students from dominant groups, attempting to show solidarity, often embrace the “saving” logic and the role of the white “savior.” At times, students remark that they are “lucky” not to belong to a Global South country, which they describe as “essentially” misogynistic, unlike the West. These roles of “oppressed” and “savior” create racialized hierarchies in the classroom and advance the tacit assumption that feminism exists only in the West and that Western feminism functions as a universal savior (Connell, “Rethinking Gender” 520).

Students who produce these statements are highly intelligent and strongly opposed to discriminatory and colonialist practices. Still, media narratives that shape understandings of the Self and the Other are often unconsciously carried into classroom discussions. Assumptions about gender roles, women’s oppression, and liberation frequently operate at a subconscious level and surface in conversations about the expected role of feminism. This workshop is designed to disrupt and challenge these normalized assumptions. The workshop is interactive by design and aims to foster insightful, critical discussion by engaging participants through reflection-based questions that invite multiple perspectives and explanations. Participants are presented with a set of ten statements drawn from real classroom conversations and are invited to reflect on whether these statements feel familiar or problematic, and to identify the binaries, hierarchies, and assumptions they may generate in classroom spaces.

Through guided exercises (using prompts and examples provided on slides), participants work to de-essentialize women’s oppression by grounding their responses in material conditions and power structures (using the Wheel of Power), replacing culturalist explanations and supremacist “saving” rhetoric with frameworks of solidarity and structural analysis. A substantial portion of the workshop is dedicated to rewriting practices, where participants collaboratively reframe statements by adding historical, colonial, economic, and political context, reversing the gaze to include Western structures of oppression, and recognizing non-Western forms of agency and resistance.

Skills (Objectives):

SUNDAY, JUNE 7, 2026

- Learn to decolonize classroom conversations
- Develop strategies to create more inclusive and genuinely diverse learning environments
- Identify and flatten hierarchical binaries
- Recognize hidden curricula in classroom discussions
- Guide students toward critical awareness of mainstream assumptions
- Increase the visibility of students of color's voices in predominantly majority-culture spaces

ACCUTE 2026 PUBLISHERS' BOOK EXHIBITION

Improvisatory Practices in Research and Pedagogy

Organizer: Sharon Engbrecht, U of Guelph

"When broken down improvisation, etymologically, lends itself to the idea of unproviding for the future, a decolonial approach to colonialist histories of individualization and knowledge production, what Elwood Jimmy and Vanessa Andreotti describe as “thread sensibilities” in Towards Braiding. Threading sensibilities are an orientation towards relationships that focus on collective well-being critical of the hierarchical nature of goal- and progress-oriented outcomes and decision-making. With this in mind, what does it mean to improvise research? What can we do to incorporate improvisation into our scholarship? How can we incorporate improvisatory practices as educators?

Part introduction to the language and tools offered through Critical Studies in Improvisation, part open discussion, and part collaborative and create think-tank about arts-based practices and creative output, the “Improvisatory Practices in Research and Pedagogy” workshop will call attention to implicit hierarchies and institutional practices while also asking participants to respectfully consider and also call into question their own practices as scholars and educators.

This workshop will give participants the chance to answer some of the above questions and to think about the confluence of improvisatory practices in research and pedagogy. Critical Studies in Improvisation gives us language and tools to work within and responsibly challenge the colonialist creep, and neoliberal structure, of the university. The language and tools of improvisation can help us reevaluate the models we have inherited, asking us to think outside the box about how to shift entrenched institutional practices while mindful of the stakes in what it means when we expose a problem at the same time we might be perceived as posing a problem (Ahmed, Living a Feminist Life).

The workshop will ask participants to examine how improvisation brings into perspective different approaches to ways of being and doing. The design of the workshop will invite participants to co-design the contents and focus of discussion. This addresses questions about how co-creation takes place within structures that demand or, in the least often presume, a clear structure of knowledge production and quantifiable outcomes. The intention behind this opening-up of the workshop's potential boundaries also invites participants to think about the way modelling can be a basis for thinking through and embodying improvisatory practices.

Together we will investigate multiple contexts of knowledge production and improvisatory practices, including what that means for post-secondary teaching and learning, community-engaged research, and spaces of knowledge curation. The hope is to work together to build a collaborative and caring environment where we can experiment, take risks, and learn from one another, while acknowledging the diversity of our lived experiences and approaches as scholars and educators.

Proposed Workshop Format (90 minutes):

15 minutes: welcome, introductions, & icebreakers

10 minutes: open discussion about experience with improvisatory practices (modelling pre-assessments of knowledge base)

15 minutes: brief intro to critical studies in improvisation's language and tools for research and pedagogical practices

15 minutes: creative problem-solving challenge & small group dialogue

10 minutes: reflective discussion

15 minutes: reassessing practices of knowledge production, embodied action, & co-creation

10 minutes: reflective discussion & debrief (handouts)

Doing Magic in the University: a workshop for the admin-curious

Organizer: Lily Cho, York U

This workshop follows on the panel of the same title at the 2021 ACCUTE conference. English literature professors are over-represented, in the best way, in the ranks of senior administration across Canada. In this workshop, we examine the skills that scholars of English literature bring to administrative and leadership work in the university. Participants will learn to map the skills they already have as scholars in our field onto some of the skills necessary for being an effective administrator. As former administrators who have served in roles at multiple levels of leadership in Canadian universities, we know that administrative work, despite its many challenges, can be a place for doing magic in the university. We want to share that possibility for magic, and for transformation during these times of crisis and austerity. We will guide participants to understand how their gifts as scholars can set them up to be outstanding university leaders. While we would be delighted to be joined by folks who are currently administrators, we particularly welcome graduate students who may be considering careers in the university outside of TT positions, and colleagues who are newer to administrative roles (or who have not yet served in one).

Skills participants will acquire skills in:

- Understanding principles of university governance
- Using a literary review and similar research skills to understand the needs of leadership

WORKSHOPS

roles

- Recognizing the value of strategic editing in policy revisions
- Understanding the role of storytelling for better communications plans
- Connecting literary critical skills to understanding institutional budget processes
- Locating institutional data and using institutional data for advocacy and decision-making
- Connecting our skills in empathy and intersectionality to approaching leadership roles

Workshop Leaders:

Lily Cho is an Associate Professor of English at York. She has served as Undergraduate Program Director, Department Chair, Associate Dean at York University. She also served as Vice-Provost and Associate Vice-President, International, at Western University.

Neta Gordon is a Professor in the Department of English Language and Literature at Brock University. She served as Department Chair from 2008 to 2014 and Associate Dean for the Faculty of Humanities from 2018 to 2021.

Laura Moss is Professor of Literature at the University of British Columbia, Vancouver. Among other leadership roles, she has served as Canadian Studies Program Chair and as Associate Dean, Students for the Faculty of Arts. Currently on UBC Senate, she is chair of the UBC Teaching and Learning Committee
